

WORKSHOP

with Ben Van Haeff

From Little Things Big Things Grow

"You never know what can grow from just one thing. You could be inspiring hundreds with just one small action." - Katie Stagliano (Katies Krops)

Children love nature - and if they've already forgotten that, this workshop will make them appreciate the fascinating beauty of the earth all over again. Through inspiring pictures, songs, and stories from around the world, students will learn that small actions in environmental protection can indeed have a big impact. Ben shows creative examples of how children in particular have found creative solutions to existing environmental problems in different corners of our planet.

Ben van Haeff is an Australian songwriter and has lived in Nuremberg since 2000. As a "Sharing Nature" trainer (after Joseph Cornell) he supports children in developing their creative potential. During the workshop, Ben will also talk about his childhood in the Australian bush, which has shaped his love of nature to this day. In addition, the children will get creative themselves by creating useful things out of supposed waste.
